Music at Aber

A great musical life is one of the strengths of Aberystwyth and its University. The close-knit character of the place really makes things happen. Generations of students have discovered the special quality of music here. Aber is a great place to live and a great place to study. It's a very special place for music.

The history of music at Aberystwyth is long and distinguished. Well over a century ago the University College established one of Britain's first music departments. Initially under Professor Joseph Parry, the musical life of the College developed and by the 1920s Aberystwyth became a significant musical focal point. Elgar, Vaughan Williams and Holst were among many great musicians who held special affections for the place.

Music degrees are no longer offered by the University but we still appreciate the importance of a vibrant musical life – after all, music matters. Performance has always been at the heart of the University's music, and the Music Centre continues the tradition by providing all students with the opportunity to play, learn, and enjoy music alongside their other studies. We invite you to take a look at what we have to offer.

Dr David Russell Hulme, MA PhD FRSA
Director of Music

THE MUSIC CENTRE

Located near the seafront in Old College, the Music Centre provides facilities for students and the local community. The Centre has practice rooms available to students of all degree programmes, and teaching spaces for those students wishing to receive instrumental or vocal lessons. It has numerous pianos, a two-manual electronic organ, harp, harpsichord and chamber organ, as well as percussion and other instruments.

The Old College is also home to the Music Library, which houses a large sheet-music collection with particularly strong holdings of chamber and orchestral music. In addition, music books can be found in the Hugh Owen Library – and, of course, the enormous resources of the National Library of Wales are close at hand.

BSc Tourism Management with Spanish
Philomusica and The University Singers
Music Scholarship Holder

I came to Aberystwyth University to study Tourism and Spanish. I like travelling and languages in general but beyond that I enjoy expressing myself through music. Being here is just like a dream because I am following a course that really interests me and I also have an opportunity to pursue my music.

The university symphony orchestra - Philomusica of Aberystwyth - has given me an opportunity to continue my passion for music and develop myself in many ways. The standard of the orchestra is high and the repertoire that it covers is wonderful. My absolute favourite work was "Danzón No. 2" by Arturo Márques.

I have met many talented and nice people. This, along with the great atmosphere in the orchestra rehearsals, has given me the motivation to practice and improve my skills in addition to really enjoying the playing and being part of something wonderful.

I have also enjoyed singing with The University Singers. Having the opportunity to sing choral works with a professional orchestra and soloists has been a wonderful experience.

SINGING

If you enjoy singing, there's plenty to get involved in at Aberystwyth. The University Singers is a large mixed choir that prepares major works for a concert with soloists and orchestra in the second term. Recent highlights include performances of Mozart's Requiem, The Dream of Gerontius and Karl Jenkins's The Armed Man and Stabat Mater. There are no auditions and everyone is welcome.

The Elizabethan Madrigal Singers is an auditioned student a cappella chamber choir, performing a much wider repertoire than its name suggests. 'Mads' enjoys an enthusiastic and committed membership and has gained a reputation for high standards. The concert tours are a popular feature of the choir's programme and have taken it to France, Germany, Poland and many other countries.

For singers with a theatrical flair the Showtime Singers perform Gilbert and Sullivan as well as popular shows and Curtain Call, a student society, also stages productions of modern musicals. Aber Opera is a small group that performs operatic excerpts in concert.

PLAYING

Aberystwyth provides great opportunities for instrumentalists. The University's symphony orchestra, Philomusica of Aberystwyth, concentrates on music of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. This large orchestra enjoys an excellent reputation and has worked with soloists of international standing, including pianist John Lill and harpist Catrin Finch. A recent orchestral highlight was the performance of Neil Brand's score to Hitchcock's silent film Blackmail.

The University Sinfonia is a chamber orchestra that comes together on a semi-casual basis to enjoy smaller repertoire. Also, on a more informal level, the University runs weekly string and saxophone groups, Simply Strings and Saxophony.

The University Concert Band offers wind, brass and percussion players the chance to experience the full range of the wind band repertoire. It provides a musical opening for both advanced and less experienced musicians and performs two concerts a year. Aberystwyth Silver Band is a local brass band with a busy concert calendar and offers a warm welcome to students.

INSTRUMENTAL & VOCAL LESSONS

If you have been learning for many years or would like to take up something new, instrumental and vocal tuition is available through the Music Centre at special student rates. Playing an instrument and singing are certainly great ways to take a break and de-stress. So if you are interested in arranging lessons, please contact the Music Centre.

PRACTICE FACILITIES & THE MUSIC CARD

Whether you are taking lessons or not, the Music Centre's practice rooms in Old College are available to all students. Each room is equipped with a good piano. For a small annual fee, students, staff and local musicians can purchase a Music Card. This gives access to practice rooms, as well as free membership of Music Centre ensembles and music library borrowing.

Described as 'A National Flagship for the Arts', it is a major venue for international artists, as well as local performers, with plenty of orchestral concerts, recitals, opera and drama on offer. Alex Bland (trombone)

BSc Marine and Freshwater Biology
Philomusica and Concert Band
Music Scholarship Holder

When deciding which university to attend, the musical opportunities on offer were an important factor in my final decision. Aberystwyth University has a rich history of musical excellence therefore the decision was easier than I thought.

Personal highlights of mine include playing Principal Trombone for Philomusica in Rachmaninoff's 1st symphony, and bass trombone in Holst's famous Planets Suite.

We have also done some great repertoire with the University Concert Band, and I even had the chance to perform a solo concerto work entitled Dance Sequence by Gareth Wood.

The musical opportunities on offer here at Aberystwyth are second to none, and with the excellent support from the staff, I have been able to broaden my musical horizons into both starting a trombone quartet and delving into musical theatre - incorporating such aspects as conducting and teaching.

The social aspect of music has always been important, and due to an even mix of students, locals and University staff involved in the various ensembles, it has led me to make some really great like-minded friends who will remain as such for a long while yet.

LIVE MUSIC

If you enjoy listening to live music, Aberystwyth offers an enormously diverse musical life. The Music Centre ensembles present regular concerts, and the Arts Centre is host to a large number of performances every year (see opposite). The Students' Union organises a full programme of live band events. Folk music is thriving with, as you might expect, a strong Celtic bias. Live music, including jam nights, is a feature of several Aberystwyth pubs, including Rummers, Scholars, and the Ship & Castle. Local festivals include MusicFest, The Big Tribute, and Mid Mad. If you keep an eye out for posters, you'll find there's something for everyone around the town.
